The gay porn world comprises an ever-growing field of players. There are traditional companies (Falcon Studios, Titan Media, Channel 1 Releasing, Jet Set Men, Lucas Entertainment, Raging Stallion Studios, Hot House Entertainment); Web-based video-on-demand sites (SeanCody.com, RandyBlue.com, CorbinFisher.com, CockyBoys.com, StraightBoysFucking.com); DIY-porn "tube" sites (XTube.com, GayTube.com, YouPorn.com, RedTube.com); BitTorrent and peer-to-peer file-sharing networks (ThePirateBay.org); online distribution and pay-per-view sites (AEBN.net); fetish sites (BoundGods.com); live webcam sites (Flirt4Free.com, Cam4.com); reality sites (Fratpad.com); porn star sites (BrentCorriganInc.com); porn star fan sites (KruezerAtNight.com); hookup sites (Manhunt.net); and there are still one or two morn-and-pop video stores down the street. For the time being, at least.

Midsize studio P2P Productions announced in February that it was suspending production for the rest of the year. "The recession is strangling us," explains owner Peter Z. Pan. "A lot of little companies are going out of business. I'm just barely hanging on. If I don't produce any new content [now], and if the economy begins to turn around in a few months, I think I can survive. And that's because I have very little overhead. Other small companies will just disappear."

A SATURATED MARKET

Over the last decade, the gay porn market has been inundated with massive amounts of new product. Self-proclaimed producers from all walks flocked to adult entertainment, operating under the correct assumption that sex sells and the sort-of-correct assumption that there's an endless supply of customers. "What most failed to consider is that there is also an endless supply of content," says veteran porn analyst Tom Hymes.

"I got into the industry at a really amazing time," says porn commentator and online talk-show host Jason Sechrest. "It was 1998. Jenna Jameson was just becoming a household name, and the adult entertainment industry was on the cover of Time and Newsweek. We started telling CNN that we were a multimillion-dollar industry! We may as well have just taken a gun and put it to our head. Everyone with a camcorder picked it up and said, 'Hey! I'm going to do that!'"

"Sean Cody has a business model that works—he got in early, made a name for himself, and has the momentum. But for every one Sean Cody, there are maybe 5,000 sites that will fail."

Raging Stallion Studios/Pistol Media merged with AEBN/NakedSword in February to create one of the largest gay adult entertainment companies in the world. Steve Johnson, CEO of Falcon Entertainment, says this is just the beginning of a much-needed consolidation in the industry. "There's a lot of redundancy and competitiveness," he says. "We're all creating accounting systems and distribution systems and making websites and having warehouses and maintaining studios and factories, and we all walk around being paranoid of each other when we ought to be embracing each other."

GIVING IT AWAY

I recently asked a group of college students how they felt about pornography, and they unanimously agreed that porn is terrific—and that it is and should be free. In a Wall Street Journal article titled "The Economics of Giving It Away," Chris Anderson noted that members of the Google generation are "saving their money and playing free online games, listening to free music on Pandora, canceling basic cable and watching free video on Hulu, and killing their landlines in favor of Skype. It's a consumer's paradise. The Web has become the biggest store in history and everything is 100% off."

ETHICAL PORNOGRAPHY

BY TINA VASQUEZ

It's April 2011, and in the dark of a very small room about 70 people are watching porn together. There's a scene in which the vagina of genderqueer-identified porn performer Jiz Lee is positioned over the face of trans performer Billy Castro, giving him a mouthful of ejaculate. It's the queer reimagining of the "money shot," and for many in the room it's the first time they've ever seen anything like it.

The scene plays out as part of the QSpeak series at The Center in Long Beach, California, and on this night there is a viewing and discussion with Jiz Lee and performer/producer/pornographer Courtney Trouble. Her websites NoFauxx.com and QueerPorn.TV have helped nonularize the term "queer female-to-male transsexual porn niche. Trouble's handpicked, self-produced selections are definitely hot and steamy, but to the discerning eye they're also politically charged. Over the past 10 years (and without really intending to do so), the young filmmaker has increased the visibility and social legitimacy of sexual and gender minorities who, until very recently, were treated as mere fetishes for straight male porn consumers.

"Queer porn is made by the sexual fringe. It's sex-positive portrayals of fluid sexuality, diverse genders throughout the spectrum, couplings and co-partners you wouldn't expect and sex acts that represent personal authenticity. Queer porn is people being true to themselves and being very out, loud and

You can tell it's porn by the .XXX.

Source: New Scientist. 6/11/2006, Vol. 186 Issue 2503, p25-25. 1/5p.

Document Type: Article
 Subjects: PORNOGRAPHY
 SEX industry
 WEBSITES
 EROTICA
 SCANDALS
 INTERNET advertising

Abstract: This article presents information related to adult websites. Adult websites are to be given their own xxx domain, which should allow pornographers to promote themselves more easily to customers, while protecting others from accidentally accessing porn online. But it could lead to more, not less scandal. While some hope the move will establish a virtual border around adult websites and make it easier to filter out explicit content before it reaches children, others say it will trigger a scramble for lucrative web addresses and legal disputes between porn sites.

10. HIS TESTICLES

Imagine if your husband slipped a silk scarf between your legs with such a light touch you weren't quite sure you actually felt something, except that you most definitely knew you wanted more. That's the kind of subtly exquisite feeling you can elicit from a man by handling his prized possessions with tender loving care. Come to think of it, he might love the scarf too. It's amazing how often you hear guys say that their wives ignore their testicles during sex play. Most likely, you're wary of inflicting harm—and the testicles are indeed delicate—but as long as you don't pinch, squeeze, or dig in your nails, all you need worry about is how much pleasure your man can take. He'll love it if you lightly scratch his testicles and gently pull or rub his scrotum. If you want to turn up the sexual volume, try caressing him wearing satin gloves or sneaking undercover to stake out the new territory with your mouth and tongue.

11. HIS PERINEUM AND ANUS

As your fingers travel just past the testicles toward the anus, you'll arrive at a richly endowed little patch of skin called the perineum that's capable of producing something near bliss when lightly stroked. Because a man's prostate gland sits directly above it, massaging the perineum in a light circular motion sends major shivers inside. Do this just at the point of orgasm, and he'll be struggling for air.

Now, your husband may not admit it, but he might give up his firstborn if your fingers would continue along their merry way to his anus. It's not only sensitive to touch, but the taboo factor makes it instantly erotic. However, if your husband doesn't like surprises, this little side trip is not one you'd want to just spring on him. "A lot of guys associate anything anal with homosexuality and are repulsed," says psychologist Bernie Zilbergeld, Ph.D., author of Male Sexuality. "It's a psychological thing, not physical." Also, some guys can't get the image of a doctor snapping a latex glove out of their mind. If you're unsure about your husband's reaction, discuss it with him first to see if the idea interests him.

12. HIS BUTT

A man's buns are pretty darn sexy when clothed, but get them naked and you're talking about the ultimate sex toys. And you've got plenty of opportunity to tease them silly, especially out in public where he can't do a thing about it. Cop a feel as your husband is heading out the door, or rub up against him with a playful bump-and-grind, or give him a good squeeze and smack. The thing about the butt is you can play like you mean it—it's built for rough handling, so go ahead and grab, pinch, dig in your nails, and yes, spank him if that's what you think he's secretly hankering for. It's the kind of pain some men would practically beg for, and you may enjoy inflicting it, for all you know.

So why not try it? After all, the king awaits.

WE POLLED 5,000 MEN ONLINE: WHAT OTHER SEX SPOT TURNS YOU ON MOST?

Okay, we cheated a bit when we asked this question, because we didn't include any body part remotely connected to the penis. But we knew that would skew the results and our goal was to identify his other hot spots.

Strip Till You Drop.

Authors: Polet, Alison
Hurwitz, Page

Source: Nation, 1/12/2004, Vol. 278 Issue 2, p20-25. 4p. 1 illustration.

Document Type: Article

Subjects: TEENAGERS
HUMAN sexuality
STRIPTEASERS
CLOTHING & dress
GIRLS' underwear
YOUTH -- Sexual behavior
FEMINISM
EROTICA
MASS media -- Social aspects
PLAYBOY Enterprises Inc.

Abstract: The author reports on the trend towards sexualization of clothing and media aimed at pre-teen and teenage girls. In case you haven't tuned in to teen or tween media lately, stripping has gone mainstream. TV shows and movies from "Stripperella" to "Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle" regularly feature voluptuous heroines flashing the flesh. The discussion has acquired a new dimension now that a mass marketed ideal of female sexiness derived from stripper culture is being sold to an ever younger set. The most ubiquitous stripper-inspired purchase a girl can make is a thong, a product with a heritage in exotic dancing. The thong's ostensible purpose is to hide panty lines, but what ultimately drives the sale is the nice but naughty message its design implies--and sometimes not so subtly. The Playboy bunny has hopped back into fashion, swishing its cottontail into the teen market. Revamped as cuddly and camp, the bunny is poised to enter the world of family-friendly entertainment with He's "Superbunnies," a cartoon series about Playboy playmates who fight the enemies of democracy. Few have surfed the stripper wave with more success than Joe Francis, whose branchid, "Girls Gone Wild," is a four-year-old, $100 million entertainment empire solely based on amateur videotapes of college students flashing their breasts. If adolescent girls of the 1950s had only two options, virgin and whore, these clothes seem to blur the line between the two.
